Director's Notes

When the students and faculty started brainstorming ideas for this production, we began by asking ourselves what we believed to be the purpose of theatre. The old adage held true and we settled on a mission intended to “entertain and instruct our audience,” but we also wanted to send our audience away talking - we wanted to inspire debate. The play itself developed into an exploration of human communication in the digital age of ultimately how we are losing the ability to communicate with each other on a personal level. Over the next hour and twenty minutes or so, we hope to entertain you by stirring your emotions and your intellect. We offer no answers, but we hope to meet our goals and serve the theme of the play by opening a forum for discussion between audience members as to what they have just witnessed.
